Cycling plastic waste is important for protecting the environment. Single-use plastics, like bottles and bags, often end up in landfills or oceans, causing pollution. A good solution is upcycling, which turns old plastic into useful items, reducing waste. Upcycling helps to keep plastics out of the environment and gives them a second life. However, contamination can make recycling difficult, as plastic waste must be clean to be reused. By properly sorting and cleaning plastic waste, we can increase recycling efficiency and decrease plastic pollution. Cycling plastic waste helps to create a cleaner, healthier planet for future generations.

Ⓐ Answer the following questions:

- 1 How can upcycling reduce plastic waste in communities?
- 2 Why is contamination a challenge in recycling plastic waste?
- 3 What can individuals do to properly cycle their plastic waste?
